FOREWORD

The importance of reading in the lives of children demands that teachers, librarians, and parents give careful attention to the selection of books from which children may make their choices. The purpose of this bibliography is to acquaint adults and children with the wide range of interesting subjects and readable styles of literature which are available for the youth of today.

Grateful acknowledgment is made to the specialists in librarianship and elementary education who assisted in the selection of the representative list of titles included. Appreciation is also expressed to the publishers who cooperated in supplying information, illustrations, and books.

BESS GOODYKOONTZ,
Assistant U. S. Commissioner of Education.

INDIVIDUAL ENTRIES

Individual entries include :

1. Author's name.
2. The full title of the book.
3. Illustrators, editors, and translators when their names seemed to be important in identifying the book.
4. The publisher's name.
5. The last copyright date of the book, and the date of reprinting if the book is a reprint edition, or the abbreviation n. d. when no date was available.
6. The number of pages or the abbreviation unnum. if the numbers were not printed on the pages of the book.
7. If the books are not bound in cloth, boards has been used to indicate a stiff binding with a paper cover, and paper has been used to indicate a book bound in a paper cover.
8. The list price of the book which has been checked with each individual publisher.
9. The annotation which gives a brief description of the book.
10. Picture-book format has been used to indicate large-sized books or small book for volumes that are not the average size of children's books.

SYMBOLS

- "P" indicates a book that preschool-aged children can appreciate.
"I" indicates a book that is especially suited to the needs and intents of beginners in reading.
"R" indicates a book that has been used successfully for reading aloud.
"T" indicates a book that has been used successfully for story-telling.
Numbers following grades suggest the range of grades in which the book will probably be enjoyed the most.

500 BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

PREFACE

THIS COMPARATIVELY brief list of approximately 500 readable books for preschool and elementary-school children should be useful to: (1) School librarians who have limited funds to spend for an initial book collection or for additional volumes to add to a small library; (2) teachers who have limited funds to spend for classroom libraries; (3) librarians of public libraries who do not have specialists in children's literature on their staffs; and in addition (4) parents or friends of children who wish to guide children in their home reading and to purchase books for children's personal libraries.

METHOD OF COMPILATION

During the summer of 1938 a tentative list of books, based upon a partially completed Minnesota State list, was compiled by a class of students in children's literature at the University of Chicago. Later the list was sent for checking and suggestions to the State supervisors of school libraries, a group of children's librarians, and a group of specialists in the field of elementary education. The editor then formulated the present list by studying the individual books with the aid of the suggestions from the specialists.

SELECTION OF BOOKS

The books included represent a cross section of the heritage in reading material that is available to children of today. The selection was made because it is desirable to have books that children can read with pleasure and profit, for then they may find satisfaction in reading as adults. Careful selection was made of authors, illustrators, and editions in order to secure a variety of material which is representative of the wealth of books that are available for the children's library.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

The following principles have guided the selection of types of books to be included in the list:

1. Children have many different interests; namely, those centered about the home, the school, the community; their own activities, needs, dreams, and desires. Moreover, these interests may be developed to various degrees in each child.

2. Children differ greatly in their ability to read, to understand science, to work with their hands, to appreciate music, to comprehend the need of principles for living, etc.

3. The environment is an important factor in the life of children.

CRITERIA USED IN THE SELECTION OF BOOKS

A. Content:

I. Factual:

1. Subject interests the child.
2. Contents contribute to the child's mental, spiritual, aesthetic, or social development.
3. Style suitable to the subject matter.
4. Authoritative.
5. Up to date.
6. Accurate.
7. Unprejudiced.

II. Imaginative:

1. Subject interests the child.
2. The fancy true to the scene designed.
3. The characters, plot, and setting sincere, vital, and true to the life described.
4. The style of writing appropriate to the subject.
5. The literature gives children an opportunity to gain desirable experiences vicariously in relation to an understanding of self, of his community, or of the past.

B. Format:

- I. Binding appropriate.
- II. Size suitable.
- III. Appearance satisfactory.
- IV. Readability of printed page.
- V. Illustrations in harmony with and illuminating the text.

ANNOTATIONS

The annotations were written with the hope that they might be of assistance to parents, teachers, and librarians in determining which books most nearly meet the needs of individual children. The notes should also be of value to both adults and children in helping them to decide which books are concerned with subjects about which children wish to read. Further, the notes introduce them to subjects which are still undiscovered.

Quoted passages in the annotations are taken from the books in question unless otherwise stated.

GRADING

The degree of reading proficiency of children within school grades varies throughout the country. There is also a great difference in the reading ability of children within each grade. The grouping and grading have been included with the hope that they may be of assistance in locating the material of the greatest interest and of the desired reading difficulty. Groups and grades indicated are by no means definitely fixed.

However, with the aid of the librarians and teachers who assisted in checking the books for inclusion in this list, the books have been roughly divided into three parts, namely, Section I, Grades 1-3; Section II, Grades 4-6; Section III, Grades 7-8. Also under each book entered the range of grades has been noted within which children have read the book with pleasure.

The lower number signifies the grade in which children who read easily may enjoy the book. The higher number signifies the grade in which children are still interested in reading the book. The suggested grading does not take into account the exceptionally bright child or the child with serious reading difficulties.

It is probable that some children who are classed in the third grade at school may enjoy books that other children who are classed in the fourth grade read with pleasure. Those in the fourth grade may wish to read books that are listed as belonging to the third grade. It is important to examine books in both sections I and II when selecting for children in the lower grades, because there are many so-called "border-line books." It is also necessary to examine more than section II when choosing books for children in the middle grades. There may be material of great importance to some seventh- and eighth-grade children in section II.

No book has been entered more than once.

PUBLISHERS

The publishers have permitted the Office of Education Library to retain the entire collection of books listed in this publication, so that they may be convenient at all times for reference and examination by members of the staff, visiting teachers, parents, librarians, and others.

ILLUSTRATORS

A separate list of illustrators also has been included because increasing interest in the art of decoration and illustration of books for children makes it desirable to have these names readily available.

BOOKS IN THE HOME

"Thus with a good and varied library to choose from, and a regular book hour for story telling or reading aloud, parents may not only accomplish wonders in the education of their children but they may bring about a mutual enjoyment that will as time goes on result in a deep, tender, and abiding friendship between themselves and their boys and girls. And in after years those children will look back with grateful memories to the social hour which gave them not only their love of books but brought them nearer to their home."¹

THE READING HABIT

"Children should be allowed to make their own choices, but only the best should be placed at their disposal for the choice. The 'remarkable faith' of the reader, young or old, in the printed page places a heavy responsibility on the librarian or teacher. The reading habit is formed during impressionable years. What children read during this period is important not only for itself but for what it invites them to read next. If they are introduced to, and encouraged to read, a wide variety of the right sort, their taste will grow progressively in the right direction. But if they are allowed to read the dull, the sensational, the inane, their tastes will deteriorate and may easily become perverted. Children's librarians are conscious of this responsibility of forming reading tastes and opinions. Through experience, these librarians learned that it is often possible to counteract an interest in the trivial, commonplace, or even harmful, by presenting books sound and engaging in content, artistic and pleasing to the eye."²

THE CHILD'S OWN LIBRARY

"It is a great thing to start life with a small number of really good books which are your very own."—SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE.

"One's own particular library should, most definitely, consist of those books which have a particular meaning for one; not numbers but significance is what counts in a library that means anything to its owner. A book one wishes to read over and over again, a book having certain passages which mean to one things that they might perhaps not mean to anyone else, a book we can count on to give us mental stimulation, or to soothe a fretted spirit—these are the ones to go into our private libraries, and by these marks ye shall know the booklovers at whatever age, even though they may be too young to recognize such mature definitions."³

³ Lucy M. Kinloch, instructor in children's work, Pratt Institute School of Library Science, Brooklyn, N. Y. From Elementary English Review, November 1935.
